
A special thanks to CPT Noel Woodward, Mannheim Legal Assistance Office, for providing the information listed below:

The US Dept of Health and Human Services, Child Support Enforcement Division has a superb website that has a hypertext link to many states. This includes sites to some States which you have listed below, some of which you still have no entry for. Your list appears to include some states that the DHHS site does not have. These links will take the reviewer to a website for the State Enforcement authorities. It may or may not have the specific guidelines.

Their website is:

The core website at www.acf.dhhs.gov/programs/cse will also provide very helpful information. In the past I have downloaded the new federally accepted support enforcement forms.

Internet Links to State Child Support Guidelines

I am attempting to compile a list of Internet sites that have child support guidelines for each of the states. As a legal assistance attorney practicing in Germany, custodial parents often ask me the amount of child support they might expect to receive, or noncustodial parents ask how much they might have to pay, based on a particular state's child support guidelines.

Unfortunately, there is no web site that provides a comprehensive resource for this, as they do for child support enforcement. The best web sites I have found for child support, as well as other divorce information, are www.divorcenet.com and www.divorceinfo.com. They are constantly expanding the information and states that they cover. DivorceInfo also provides some interesting and wry editorial comments about the content of their links to divorce information in various states.

Below is the list that I have compiled thus far.
